BARN BOARD SIDING

This material comes from agricultural structures across North America. True “barn-wood,” it once sided a barn or granary, and therefore exhibits a wide range of brown and gray colors within or among boards. While it is usually about an inch thick, barn siding was generally rough milled with material that was readily available at the time of the barn raising, and so our supply reflects these nuances of species and dimensions.

Our barn board siding will include nail holes, strapping marks, rough and smooth texture and other historical character. It can be applied in various patterns, including board to board, board and batten, reverse board and batten, and board on board. We also offer shiplap and tongue and groove mill profiles.
